Part -1
The Dawn of the Evil

Before getting into the story, let me tell you about a village far from the city, deep in the hollow woods, which had a heritage of 10 decades. There were harmony and peace all around; even in ancient times and in the present, there was no need for law and order due to their belief in God. They believed that God punished the evil, and so there had been no robbery or murder in the town's history. But is it going to be the same? Let's discover further in the story.

The Savior

There was a man who lived his life as a software engineer at Google. He was in his twenties, energetic, and positive-minded. His friend was named Vishwa, and our saviour was named Alok. When he met his friend in the office, they had not seen each other for a long time, as Alok had gone to pursue an ethical hacking license. He was also fit, not much to be called a bodybuilder, but he had a nice shape. His friend asked, "I heard they are giving you a great deal in your increment this year."

"Oh, really? I gave my resignation letter last month before going to the ethical hacking course."

"Okay, so they are trying to tempt you with money? Hmm, might be. But why are you leaving the office?"

"I wrote UPSC exams and got okay marks, and I am thinking of taking IPS."

"What? Why?"

"I was inspired by Sherlock Holmes to become cool and to solve any story and all mysteries in the blink of an eye. I also received the job letter. My mom received it and is praying to God to get me posted somewhere safe."

"Hmm, okay, and don't forget to inform her. She is very furious about you leaving without telling her about the course."

"Oh my goodness. I need to hurry to her. Okay, let's meet sometime else, and don't forget me. I am always here for you. Bye-bye.

Alok rushed on his bike to the coffee shop to meet her. She had actually asked him to meet her. When she arrived, she gave him a wedding card and congratulated him on her marriage. But due to his ignorance and happiness, he didn't even read it. She slapped him on the face and said, "Read it!" He read it; everything was proper at the beginning: the bride, Hasini, and then there was the groom's name, which was Alok.

He thought the world was a small place, but she slapped him again and said, "You are the groom! Don't you understand? I always thought of you as a friend, but never like this. You might not think that way, but I love you and your character. So, I don't care about your opinion; this is not a request but an order."

"Okay, okay, I accept it, but my mom..."

A small reminder: I grew up in an orphanage with many others like me, and my mom took care of all of us. Back to the story: Okay. I kept it a secret while you went for the course. They both married and had a grand wedding.

The Posting

The posting was in Shani Shingnapur village. Then he requested them to give him another post, but then he received a long letter about the secret murder in the area. The government of Maharashtra had requested some force from our state to resolve it, as using local police would leak the news, creating utter chaos in a town that didn't even have doors. The suspect was a 12-year-old boy. He thought that this was the case he had been searching for and was intrigued, but he didn't share the news that it was so risky. His mom was happy that her kid was safe from any threat.

IS IT SO? LET'S SEE IN THE NEXT PART. ALSO, DID HE REALLY DO THE COURSE, OR DID HE DO SOMETHING ELSE?
To be continued in Part 2
Coming shortly.